Clear Visualization of Story Structure

Stories can sometimes feel complex or confusing, especially for younger audiences. The organizer visually separates story elements, which helps readers see how events unfold logically. This visualization reinforces narrative understanding.

By asking “but” and “so” questions, this tool pushes users to think about cause and effect within the story, promoting deeper analysis beyond surface-level reading.

How to Use the Somebody Wanted But So Then Graphic Organizer

Using this graphic organizer is straightforward but can be adapted for different age groups and learning goals.

Step 1: Identify ‘Somebody’ and ‘Wanted’

Start by pinpointing the main character and their goal. For example, in “Cinderella,” the somebody is Cinderella, and what she wanted was to attend the royal ball.

Step 2: Recognize the ‘But’ (Conflict)

Next, determine the obstacle. In Cinderella’s case, it was her stepmother preventing her from going to the ball.

Step 3: Explore ‘So’ (Actions Taken)

What actions did the character take to overcome the obstacle? Cinderella’s fairy godmother helped her, and she went to the ball.

Step 4: Understand ‘Then’ (Resolution)

Finally, note the outcome. Cinderella met the prince and lived happily ever after.

Applying the Organizer to Different Genres
